Who can join?

Any local government that wishes to to commit itself to the principles of the Charter of Educating Cities can become an active member of the Association, regardless of its administrative powers in education.

How to proceed?

In order to formalise membership to the International Association of Educating Cities (IAEC), this request must be agreed by the municipal decision-making body of elected politicians (Municipal Council or others). The final decision on admittance lays on the General Assembly.

Members shall contribute to the IAEC functioning by paying an annual fee, in accordance with the city's population and the country's Gross National Income per capita.
